In Photoshop final project I took a variety of photos both taken by myself as well as found on the internet and composed them through layering and masking techniques. This piece came from an irreverent place where I wasn't sure what to make of the project description. I had recently watched a video on nuclear

In the Illustrator final project I used a photo that I took while passing by Mount Fuji via Shinkansen. I used a variety of simple shapes joined together into groups to create the crabs, houses, and telephone lines. I used the text tool to add some text with a heavy stroke.

In my Animate final project I took my illustrator final project and added motion to the crabs stomping through the city via motion tweens. When the crabs hit the houses I also used tweens to send them launching. Finally I used a shape tween to have the text come flying in from off screen.

Prior to this class a lot of my work was focused on a combination of traditional techniques such as charcoal and pencil as well as a combination of mixed media techniques such as paint, cutting machine, and India inks. This has been a step outside of my typical workflow and has allowed me to gain new skills
